We know white kids cyberbully more than minorities; we don’t know why

by ANDY MATARRESE

June 01, 2011

Cyberbullying-related deaths in the news

Tyler Clementi: Rutgers freshman Tyler Clementi, 18, killed himself in September after discovering his roommate allegedly recorded a romantic encounter Clementi had with another man and released it online.

Phoebe Prince: Prince, 15, hanged herself in January 2010 after months of ridicule from classmates online and in school in Massachusetts.

Alexis Pilkington: Although her parents say they think the mean-spirited messages Pilkington, 17, received before committing suicide in March 2010 weren’t the main cause of her death, people were still posting nasty messages on a Facebook page made in her honor after her death.
We know white kids cyberbully more than minorities; we don’t know why